'Rona Vacation Month

A collage of meaningful experiences at home, at the beach, in the Triangle, and in Santa Cruz. Chronologically L → R then U → D.

Despite 'rona's growing threat, Darcy and I did make a trip to NC to see family. I managed to link up with Brandon, Patrick, Drew, and Melchor, and thankfully none of us was sick (to our knowledge). A more insular trip to the Outer Banks with the Raleigh Kuneshes was punctuated by skateboarding, surfing, and hot tubbing. I showed Darcy a little more of downtown Concord before she headed back to CA. I met with her a week later in Santa Cruz for a brief mini-quarantine before returning to our apartment in Davis.

EBike Conversion

I'm living far from campus this year, but still plan to commute by bike. Enter: the ebike conversion kit. smacks spokes this baby can go for 10-20 miles, and hits 30 mph!

TL: An apartment is no bike shop.

TR: My fork is too small!?

B: Finally working.

GRAD SCHOOL

A New House

Since UCD is gonna be online for the foreseeable future (at least as far as Spring, from what I can tell), it's a good thing we got out of our small apartment! Our new house has a much larger common space, a nice back yard, and a garage, along with a nearby park. We're properly in the suburbs for now, but it's made for a great place to set up shop for online work.

When this is all over, we'll have even more room for guests!

TL: Spent waaaay too much time making this. We have a new housemate, Sudheer.

L: Minnick's much-lusted-for Simple Green, used in preparation for our move.

C: The whole house either yoga-ing or smashing. R: Minnick's first "real" pork butt.

Psst – Check out my new One Second Everyday! Audio issues to be resolved soon...
